"A people without the knowledge of their past history, origin and culture is like a tree without roots" - Marcus Garvey. The manuscript of this book was written by Victoria Aikoroje (my late sister) driven by her passionate interest in tracing and establishing the origin of her people - the Ora people. Unfortunately, she could not publish the work because her life on earth was suddenly cut short. She died in 1984 aged 25 years. I took up the responsibility and task of publishing her manuscript into this book for the following reasons: *To keep alive the name and research work of the author. *To ensure that her valuable efforts to provide a credible narration of the history, origin, and culture of the Ora people are not wasted as a result of her demise. *To let the present and future generations of Ora people know where they came from and that because of their roots, they and their children are indeed "princes" and "princesses" who belong to the royal family of the great Benin kingdom as revealed by Victoria's research work. I have done very minimal edits to the original manuscript in order to rearrange the flow of the content for easy reading. The manuscript was dated April 1983 and for this reason, some aspects of the content of the book (as would be expected) have over the intervening period experienced social, political, geographical and economic changes. This calls for the reader to consider the text in the book from the perspective of the author writing her story during the aforementioned period. Please read, enjoy, be informed and intrigued.

Even though this study was primarily on human trafficking and prostitution among Edo women and girls of Edo state in Nigeria, human trafficking, however, is a widespread, visible phenomenon in the world today. It is a global problem. A report from United Nations Office on Drug and Crime in 2014 says that human trafficking involves over three million people in the world, bringing their slaveholders an annual profit of 32 billion dollars. According to the same report, there is no place in the world where children, women, and men are safe from human trafficking. In the background, the stark reality of poverty, unemployment, social marginalization, political crises, wars, interethnic conflicts, and the militarization of entire territories has increased the massive displacements of the population, fuelling the illegal sex trade linked to them. Many youngsters who desire to improve their living conditions and those of their families fleeing their homes often become prey to criminal organizations who take advantage of them, exploit them, and dehumanize them. Little do they know when they are leaving their homes to go to overseas, what is waiting for them is often something altogether different, namely intimidation, blackmail, violence, nightmare, and slavery that strip them of all dignity and respect. To make matters worse, most of the victims and their families not only lose credibility but are also ostracized by their local communities when what happened comes to light. Therefore, the victims of this painful chain are not only young girls and boys but also families. Unfortunately, some parents, especially mothers, have also been perpetrators of this deplorable crime. They push their daughters into the arms of their torturers, lulled by the dream of a brighter future. To stop and to prevent the reoccurrence of this criminal network of complicity, which has been more or less voluntary, conscious and unconscious, a joint commitment by all governments, organizations, local communities, and individuals is necessary. Everyone needs to remember and never forget that every human being, every person has been created and procreated in the image and likeness of God and is a subject of essential rights, which should never be violated but rather should be respected and upheld by everyone in every time and place.

Extrait de la couverture : "This book holds that African women have traditionally held roles in society, that are different from those of men, and complementary to them. Among them has been the right of women to voluntarily take part in political deliberations and to fulfill some political roles assigned to them. However, Ojior sees a deliberate conspiracy by Western women and their backers to undermine the integrity of the social structure of Etsako by introducing an alien value system that pits the Etsako woman against her male counterpart. This trend is seen by the author to generate disharmony between sexes in Etsako. This change in the African women's role can disrupt the delicate equilibrium reflected in the rules of social differentiation in the etsako society."
